Brief Introduction	ACKNOWLEDGMENTS I would like to thank Richard D. Alba, Christine E. Bose, Richard H. Hall, Nan Lin, and John R. Logan, who kindly served as members of my doctoral dissertation advisory committee. Although this book has an entirely different look and substance from the dissertation ("Work Units and Status Attainment: A Study of Work-Unit Status in Urban China"), it was this dissertation with which the study presented in the book started. I particularly feel indebted to Nan Lin, who served as chair of the advisory committee and with whom I worked closely as his teaching and research assistant during the years of my graduate program at the State University of New York at Albany and later as a postdoctoral research associate at Duke University. His continuing academic and financial support at both institutions was instrumental in allowing me to pursue the research project that led to my dissertation and the writing of this book. Without Nan the work would not have been completed, nor perhaps even begun. I am grateful to Xinheng Yang and members of his research team at Nankai University, Tianjin, China, for their help in the 1988 Tianjin survey analyzed in this book; to my interviewees for their willingness to provide information about their personal experiences associated with their jobs and work units; and to Fuqin Bian, Jianhong Liu, and Xun Wang for their participation in coding the survey data into the computer. I owe particular thanks to Deborah Davis, Nan Lin (again), Maurice N. Richter, Jr., and Andrew G. Walder for their helpful comments on drafts of several chapters and for their sincere support and encouragement during the writing and revising of the manuscript. I am greatly indebted to Cynthia Cramsie and Rosalie M. Robertson for their editing assistance. I also wish to express my gratitude to Richard H. Hall and Rosalie M. Robertson for their efforts in making this publication possible. I feel extremely fortunate to have worked with these two individuals. The 1988 Tianjin survey was supported in part by a grant from the State University of New York at Albany. A postdoctoral fellowship from Duke University made it financially possible for me to analyze the data and work on the manuscript. A summer faculty
