Author Takao Kato, Jeffrey Pliskin Source JAI Pub Date 2003 Brief Introduction This volume of Advances in the Economic Analysis of Participatory and Labor Managed Firms marks the first volume in this series to be produced by Elsevier. It is also the first volume of Advances for which Jan Svejnar is not a series coeditor. As the remaining series editor. I wish to express my deep debt of gratitude to Jan for the enormously valuable role he has played in helping to launch Advances and in the development of the general field of participation. These changes are being used as an opportunity for Faluanch the series. One of the key changes are being used as an opportunity for Faluanch the series. One of the key changes relates to the frequency of publication. Whereas in recent years Advances has appeared erratically, henceforth the aim is to publish Advances on a regular and annual basis. Reflecting a deepening pool of talent as the field of participation has grown during the last wenty years or so, another change, as is evident in the present volume, is to make frequent use of guest editors for issues of Advances. As series editor, I welcome suggestions and proposals from readers for participator since the velocine suggestions and proposals from readers for participatory and labor managed organizations. The original rationale for the series was the observation that while general and specialized journals publish work in this field, many do so only occasionally. There continues to be a need for an annual periodical that presents some of the best papers in a single volume. While the focus will continue to be on economic issues, analytical studies on closely related areas are also welcome. Advances will also continue to serve as an outlet for high quality pieces that regular journals often consider to be too long. The broad area of participation and labor management has changed much since the inception of the series in 1985. The tragic disintegration of the Former Republic of Yugoslavia also meant the disappearance
Brief Introduction FOREWORD This volume of Advances in the Economic Analysis of Participatory and Labor Managed Firms marks the first volume in this series to be produced by Elsevier. It is also the first volume of Advances for which Jan Svejnar is not a series co-editor. As the remaining series editor, I wish to express my deep debt of gratitude to Jan for the enormously valuable role he has played in helping to launch Advances and in the development of the general field of participation. These changes are being used as an opportunity to re-launch the series. One of the key changes relates to the frequency of publication. Whereas in recent years Advances has appeared erratically, henceforth the aim is to publish Advances on a regular and annual basis. Reflecting a deepening pool of talent as the field of participation has grown during the last twenty years or so, another change, as is evident in the present volume, is to make frequent use of guest editors for issues of Advances As series editor. I welcome suggestions and proposals from readers for particular issues. Other changes concerning Advances will be modest. Advances will continue to act as a forum for high-quality original theoretical and empirical research in the broad area of participatory and labor managed organizations. The original nationale for the series was the observation that while general and specialized journals publish work in this field, many do so only occasionally. There continues to be a need for an annual periodical that presents some of the best papers in a single volume. While the focus will continue to be one economic is sues, analytical studies on closely related areas are also welcome. Advances will also continue to serve as an outlet for high quality pieces that regular journals often consider to be too long. The broad area of participation and labor management has changed much since the inception of the series in 1985. The tragic disintegration of the Former Republic of Yugoslavia also meant the disappearance of the princ		Organizations
FOREWORD This volume of Advances in the Economic Analysis of Participatory and Labor Managed Firms marks the first volume in this series to be produced by Elsevier. It is also the first volume of Advances for which Jan Svejnar is not a series coeditor. As the remaining series editor. I wish to express my deep debt of gratitude to Jan for the commously valuable role he has played in helping to launch Advances and in the development of the general field of participation. These changes are being used as an opportunity to re-launch the series. One of the key changes relates to the frequency of publication. Whereas in recent years Advances has appeared entaically, henceforth the aim is to publish Advances on a negular and annual basis. Reflecting a deepening pool of talent as the field of participation has grown during the last twenty years or so, another change, as is evident in the present volume, is to make frequent use of guest editors for issues of Advances. As series editor, I welcome suggestions and proposals from enaders for participatal rissues. Other changes concerning Advances will continue to act as a forum for high-quality original theoretical and empirical research in the broad area of participatory and labor managed organizations. The original rationale for the series was the observation that while general and specialized journals publish work in this field, many do so only occasionally. There continues to be a need for an annual periodical that presents some of the best papers in a single volume. While the focus will continue to be one economic issues, analytical studies on closely related areas are also welcome. Advances will also continue to serve as an outlet for high quality pieces that regular journals often consider to be too long. The broad area of participation and labor management has changed much since the inception of the series in 1985. The tragic disintegration of the Former Republic of Yugosalavia also meant the disappearance of the principal systemic example of self management. But	Author	Γakao Kato,Jeffrey Pliskin
FOREWORD This volume of Advances in the Economic Analysis of Participatory and Labor Managed Firms marks the first volume in this series to be produced by Elsevier. It is also the first volume of Advances for which Jan Svejara is not a series coeditor. As the remaining series editor. I wish to express my deep debt of gratitude to Jan for the enormously valuable role he has played in helping to launch Advances and in the development of the general field of participation. These changes are being used as an opportunity to re-launch the series. One of the key changes relates to the frequency of publication. Whereas in recent years Advances has appeared erratically, henceforth the aim is to publish Advances on a regular and annual basis. Reflecting a deepening pool of talent as the field of participation has grown during the last twenty years or so, another change, as is evident in the present volume, is to make frequent use of guest editors for issues of Advances. As series editor, I welcome suggestions and proposals from readers for particular issues. Other changes concerning Advances will be modest. Advances will continue to act as a forum for high-quality original theoretical and empirical research in the broad area of participatory and labor managed organizations. The original rationale for the series was the observation that while general and specialized journals publish work in this field, many do so only occasionally. There continues to be a need for an annual periodical that presents some of the best papers in a single volume. While the focus will continue to be on economic issues, analytical studies on closely related areas are also welcome. Advances will also continue to serve as an outlet for high quality pieces that regular journals often consider to be too long. The broad area of participation and labor management has changed much since the inception of the series in 1985. The tragic disintegration of the Former Republic of Vigoslavia also meant the disappearance of the principal systemic example	Source J	JAI
This volume of Advances in the Economic Analysis of Participatory and Labor Managed Firms marks the first volume in this series to be produced by Elsevier. It is also the first volume of Advances for which Jan Svejane is not a series coeditor. As the remaining series editor, I wish to express my deep debt of gratitude to Jan for the enormously valuable role he has played in helping to launch Advances and in the development of the general field of participation. These changes are being used as an opportunity to re-launch the series. One of the key changes relates to the frequency of publication. Whereas in recent years Advances has appeared erratically, henceforth the aim is to publish Advances on a regular and annual basis. Reflecting a deepening pool of talent as the field of participation has grown during the last twenty years or so, another change, as is evident in the present volume, is to make frequent use of guest editors for issues of Advances. As series editor, I welcome suggestions and proposals from readers for particular issues. Other changes concerning Advances will be modest. Advances will continue to act as a forum for high-quality original theoretical and empirical research in the broad area of participatory and labor managed organizations. The original rationale for the series was the observation that while general and specialized journals publish work in this field, many do so only occasionally. There continues to be a need for an annual periodical that presents some of the best papers in a single volume. While the focus will continue to be on economic issues, analytical studies on closely related areas are also welcome. Advances will also continue to serve as an outlet for high quality pieces that regular journals often consider to be too long. The broad area of participation and labor management has changed much since the inception of the series in 1985. The tragic disintegration of the Former Republic of Yugosdavia also meant the disappearance of the principal systemic example of self ma	Pub Date 2	2003
It is also the first volume of Advances for which Jan Svejnar is not a series co- editor. As the remaining series editor, I wish to express my deep debt of gratitude to Jan for the enormously valuable role he has played in helping to launch Advances and in the development of the general field of participation. These changes are being used as an opportunity to re-launch the series. One of the key changes relates to the frequency of publication. Whereas in recent years Advances has appeared erratically, henceforth the aim is to publish Advances on a regular and annual basis. Reflecting a deepening pool of talent as the field of participation has grown during the last twenty years or so, another change, as is evident in the present volume, is to make frequent use of guest editors for issues of Advances. As series editor, I welcome suggestions and proposals from readers for particular issues. Other changes concerning Advances will be modest. Advances will be modest. Advances will continue to act as a forum for high-quality original theoretical and empirical research in the broad area of participatory and labor managed organizations. The original rationale for the series was the observation that while general and specialized journals publish work in this field, many do so only occasionally. There continues to be a need for an annual periodical that presents some of the best papers in a single volume. While the focus will continue to be on economic issues, analytical studies on closely related areas are also welcome. Advances will also continue to serve as an outlet for high quality pieces that regular journals often consider to be too long. The broad area of participation and labor management has changed much since the inception of the series in 1985. The tragic disintegration of the Former Republic of Yugoslavia also meant the disappearance of the principal systemic example of self management. But the collapse of the former USSR has also triggered widespread experimentation with diverse forms of participation		FOREWORD employees in decision-making as well as in enterprise results. Also several important examples of worker cooperatives continue to thrive, with the Mondragon Cooperative Consortium now representing the seventh largest consortium in Spain. Against this institutional backdrop much new and innovative theoretical and empirical work in the broad field has appeared. The key aim of the Advances series continues to be to make it a broad-based periodical within which is presented both new theoretical results and fresh evidence on the performance of participatory firms and sectors. The intent is to maintain high quality and to place this periodical among other successful Elsevier series. I hope you will be informed and stimulated by this volume and that you will consider contributing		Managed Firms marks the first volume in this series to be produced by Elsevier. It is also the first volume of Advances for which Jan Svejnar is not a series coeditor. As the remaining series editor, I wish to express my deep debt of gratitude to Jan for the enormously valuable role he has played in helping to launch Advances and in the development of the general field of participation. These changes are being used as an opportunity to re-launch the series. One of the key changes relates to the frequency of publication. Whereas in recent years Advances has appeared erratically, henceforth the aim is to publish Advances on a regular and annual basis. Reflecting a deepening pool of talent as the field of participation has grown during the last twenty years or so, another change, as is evident in the present volume, is to make frequent use of guest editors for issues of Advances. As series editor, I welcome suggestions and proposals from readers for particular issues. Other changes concerning Advances will be modest. Advances will continue to act as a forum for high-quality original theoretical and empirical research in the broad area of participatory and labor managed organizations. The original rationale for the series was the observation that while general and specialized journals publish work in this field, many do so only occasionally. There continues to be a need for an annual periodical that presents some of the best papers in a single volume. While the focus will continue to be on economic issues, analytical studies on closely related areas are also welcome. Advances will also continue to serve as an outlet for high quality pieces that regular journals often consider to be too long. The broad area of participation and labor management has changed much since the inception of the series in 1985. The tragic disintegration of the Former Republic of Yugoslavia also meant the disappearance of the principal systemic example of self management. But the collapse of the former USSR has also triggered wides pread important examples of worker cooperatives continue to thrive, with the Mondragon Cooperative Consortium now representing the seventh largest consortium in Spain. Against this institutional backdrop much new and innovative theoretical and empirical work in the broad field has appeared. The key aim of the Advances series continues to be to make it a broad-based periodical within which is presented both new theoretical results and fresh evidence on the performance of participatory firms and sectors. The intent is to maintain high quality and to place this periodical among other successful Elsevier series. I hope you will be informed and stimulated by this volume and that you will consider contributing to it and conveying information about Advances to other interested coneagues. Derek C. Jones		important examples of worker cooperatives continue to thrive, with the Mondragon Cooperative Consortium now representing the seventh largest consortium in Spain. Against this institutional backdrop much new and innovative theoretical and empirical work in the broad field has appeared. The key aim of the Advances series continues to be to make it a broad-based periodical within which is presented both new theoretical results and fresh evidence on the performance of participatory firms and sectors. The intent is to maintain high quality and to place this periodical among other successful Elsevier series. I hope you will be informed and stimulated by this volume and that you will consider contributing to it and conveying information about Advances to other interested colleagues.