Brief Introduction	Preface and Acknowledgements The chapters of this book each address a specific issue, and they can be studied separately. However they are arranged in the most helpful order for developing an understanding of the general position of the book – at least, as far as the first eight are concerned. References in the footnotes are given in short form; full details of the edition used are given in the Bibliography at the back. In the course of thinking about the issues addressed here I have had the benefit of presenting the ideas for discussion at many conferences and seminars. Earlier versions of the arguments advanced in the chapters below have sometimes appeared in associated conference publications. I am most grateful to those who organised such meetings and invited me to address them. I thank for their support and constructive criticism at various points: Tony Smith, Geert Reuten, Patrick Murray, Riccardo Bellofiore, Fred Moseley, Martha Campbell, Mark Cowling, Mario Robles Baez, Joe McCarney, Sean Sayers, Geoffrey Kay, Bertell Ollman, Mike Williams, Filio Diamanti and Hillel Ticktin. Chapter 2 is a thoroughly revised version of ‘Against the Logical-Historical Method: Dialectical Derivation versus Linear Logic’ in New Investigations of Marx’s Method, edited by F. Moseley and M. Campbell (Humanities Press, 1997).
